

Tutti Violin (50%)

The BBC Philharmonic is reimagining the orchestral experience for a new generation – challenging perceptions, championing innovation and taking a rich variety of music to the widest range of audiences.

The orchestra performs around 100 concerts every year, the vast majority broadcast on BBC Radio 3. Along with around 35 free concerts a year at its MediaCityUK studio in Salford and a flagship 20-concert series at Manchester's Bridgewater Hall, the orchestra performs across the North of England, at the BBC Proms and internationally, and records regularly for the Chandos label. Since 2019, Omer Meir Wellber has been Chief Conductor of the orchestra, which also has strong ongoing relationships with John Storgårds, Chief Guest Conductor, and Ben Gernon, Principal Guest Conductor.

The BBC Philharmonic is a true champion of new music. Having recently premiered works by Emily Howard, Outi Tarkiainen and Mark Simpson, the orchestra's Composer in Association, it is premiering pieces by Tom Coult, Philip Grange and Jeffrey Mumford in 2019/20. Through its diverse programme, it has recently broadcast on all seven BBC national radio networks.

The orchestra is pioneering new ways to engage with music. In collaboration with the BBC's Research & Development team, its trailblazing Philharmonic Lab programme of digital innovation is making music a more connected experience for listeners, while its diverse learning and education programme reaches everyone from toddlers to adults. Through all its activities, the BBC Philharmonic is bringing life-changing music experiences to audiences across Greater Manchester, the North of England, the UK and around the world.
